Antique Grey Barr machine cut into hexagons from Paris Ceramics Antique Grey Barr, which was quarried between 1820 and 1900 in the Languedoc region of France, these stones were always intended to be used as flooring in grand country homes of this area. These flagstones are all hand sawn and shaped, Antique Barr is commonly installed in coursed lengths. The quarries situated in the Languedoc area were quickly exhausted and now have been built over.

Antique Grey Barr flagstones are approximately 1" to 1¼" in thickness. The coloration is grey with some lighter and darker highlights and flecks. This is a grand stone floor suitable for areas where impact is extremely important. These are large and more consistently sized rectangular flagstones, lending them to a traditional or modern interior.

Antique Blonde Barr is approximately 1" to 1¼" in thickness. The coloration varies between golden beige and a light grey. The texture was originally open grain and soft when first installed in the 1900's. With the passage of time and use the stone surface became harder and worn to a slightly undulating finish. More consistent in rectangular size, the variation in color lends itself to any period property.
